Critical Accounting Judgments and Estimates

Valuation and Impairment Testing of Cable Franchise Rights, page 33

1. We note from your disclosures that you estimate the fair value of your cable franchise rights primarily based upon a discounted cash flow analysis. In your letter dated August 24, 2009 written in response to our letter dated July 23, 2009 with respect to your 2008 Form 10-K, you provided us with your basis for utilizing an Excess Earnings Cash Flow model to measure these rights. Specifically, you told us that you believe the Excess Earnings Cash Flow model is appropriate because it results in the direct quantification of the future economic benefits of your franchise rights. In addition, you indicated that you are able to support this conclusion because you corroborate the estimated fair value derived from the Excess Earnings Cash Flow methodology by valuing your franchise rights, using a Greenfield methodology. After further consideration, we believe that the use of an Excess Earnings Cash Flow model is not a valuation approach that determines the direct value of franchise rights. In this regard, we note that this method fails to allow for the possibility that some amount of the residual income may be attributable to goodwill rather than solely to the franchise rights. Since the franchise rights have indefinite lives and are therefore not considered to be a wasting asset, no portion of the income stream is left unassigned when following the multi-period excess earnings methodology, and as a result, no economic benefit can be attributed to goodwill. Therefore, we believe that you should use a Greenfield methodology to determine fair value of your franchise rights.
