Three years ago, Comcast started a program called Internet Essentials™ to bridge the digital divide. Today, it's the nation's largest and most comprehensive broadband adoption program. Over one million low-income Americans have connected to the Internet at home via Internet Essentials. Through the transaction with Time Warner Cable, Comcast will bring the transformative power of the Internet to millions more people from New York to Los Angeles. WHO WANTS MORE STUDENTS TO HAVE ACCESS TO LOW-COST INTERNET?

Every child deserves equal access to a good education. So three years ago we started a program called Internet EssentialsSM to connect low-income families to the power of the Internet. Today, it's the nation's largest and most comprehensive broadband adoption program. Over one million low-income Americans have connected to the Internet at home via Internet Essentials. Through the transaction with Time Warner Cable, we'll bring it to millions more. Find out how we can do more together at comcastcorporation.com/together
